Lights on, noises off. That's the promise of Diade, a sleek hybrid design by Monica Armani. The suspension fixture pairs linear LED task illumination with a sound-absorbing upholstered panel that, when mounted between workstations, also acts as divider—and obviates the need for a suspended ceiling. The unit's two wing panels, anchored to an extruded-aluminum armature, can be positioned vertically or horizontally, cutting background noise and quashing acoustic overlap. The PET fabric comes in three neutrals, while the fixture itself can be specified as a direct or combination direct/indirect source.
